A complete lack of sympathy with the operations of the British officials is said to have caused the assumption of this attitude, but now that cases have begun to emerge from the court dockets, throwing the weight of judicial decisions behind the claim of extended high seas jurisdiction, it is understood that there is to be a change in the course of the London government.

Old Ways and New

Measured by the yard-stick of infinity the span of an individual human life is infinitesimal-

But the accumulative contribution of the genius and effort of succeeding generations has been the sum of all social, political and commercial

Perhaps next to food and raiment, nothing has been more important to the human race than transportation.

Even cursory consideration of the wonderful development of this phase of civilization unfolds a panorama of achievement that is graphic beyond description.

Visualize for a moment Saul of Tarsus utilizing the donkey as the then best means of travel.

Consider the slow moving Arabic camel trains employed for both passenger and freight transportation.

Even as recently as the great Napoleon, we know that the mobility of his armies depended largely upon foot work.

When the mind of Robert Fulton conceived the possibility of steam as a motive power-when Edison harnessed electricity and presented it to civilization in the shape of a storage battery. and when Otto gave to the world the gasengine, mankind slipped from the yoke of crude and natural processes of transportation.

The contrast is dramatic.

Less than 100 years ago the first line of steam railroad was laid in this country. Consider the huge freight engine of to-day that hauls its burden of approximately 35,000,000 pounds with ease and dispatch. Then note the express locomotive that laughs at speed and distance. As an example of the security of its traffic we are told that the Pennsylvania Railroad operated within a single year 1,400,000 trains, transporting a total of 164,766,666 persons without a single fatal accident.

Verily, marvels have occurred in the world of transportation both in railroads, steamships, automobiles, flying-machines and the every-day rolling stock employed in farming and business generally.

Closely associated with this development have been the banking systems of the world. They are the channels through which money and credits, so essential to industrial development, have flowed. They are the great reservoirs where savings of men and women are domiciled, and in turn utilized to make yet greater and greater the industrial fabric, in order that human environment may be increasingly improved and the joys of life augmented.
